STREET OPENING CAUSES A CLASH

Charles M. Hagan Protests Against the Grading in Front of His Father's Home and He and City Engineer Kupp Come to Blows-They Battle Until Hagan Is Forced to Retire-The Dispute.

Quite a buzz of excitement marked the opening of the day yesterday on Terrace street, directly behind St.

It was a clash between City Engineer Kupp and Charles M. Hagan that caused the stir. The city englneer was on the scene to direct some of the street commissioner's force who tulness to God beneafter prove how thoroughly came to do crowning and ditching in front of and in the vicinity of the home of the young man who figured in the excitement. The Hagans claimed that the city was trespassing on their property. The city engineer and street commissioner. on the other hand, insisted that the city was within its rights and that if anybody was trespassing, Hagon was the guilty one. Here was a difference of epinton. A difference of opinion, however, is what makes horses race says Pudden'head Wilson, and in this case it made a fight. After a tilt between Commissioner Killeen and young Mr. Hagan, there were some warm exchances between the latter and the city engineer, so warm that Old Sol, who was just beinning his day's trolic with humanity felt astonished at himself and stood still in his shame and embarrassment. Finally matters reached a climax and the pair were at each other so actively and vigorously that one would believe the physical culturists were holding high carnival. City Engineer Kupp is a big man. mighty big, and it requires a whole lot resolution to stand before him. The spectators say that Hagan lacked this resolution, especially when he sized up the street commissioner's force, and when things seemed to be going the city engineer's way there was a scampering, but it wasn't the latter who did it. Hagan retreated, and the city engineer remained, his men continuing with the crowning and ditching they set out to do.

Mr. Hagan's version is that he was struck first and the blow which felled him was from a stone thrown by some one in the crowd.

It Threatened to Explode in the House of John Norris on Clarke Avenue, While Mrs. Norris Was Preparing Supper. An oil stove created a stir in the house of John Norris, on Clarke ave-nue, near Belmont street, last evening. It was responsible for the turning in of an alarm of fire from Box 15, and the damaging of a few household goods the most serious, the painful, though not dangerous, burning of Mrs. Norris and her daughter Jessic.

Mrs. Norris was preparing the even ing meal. She was bent over the stove when a flame shot out and frightened Believing that she could hustle the stove out before it would do any damage, she grasped it and ran for the yard. On her way out another flame shot from the stove and caught her about the face and hands. In passing her daughter, the little one came in the way of the flame and was slightly burned.

The carpet was burned here and there by the dropping oil. The curtains on one of the windows was also burned. Mr. Norris was in Port Jervis. The Mitchell Hose company responded to the alarm.

On Tuesday of this week the boys were at their daily haunt, and they had a "boys' picnic" in making targets out of the "brakies." It also proved a sad and fateful day, for Constable Neary, of this city, happened to be riding or the caboose of Conductor Swingle's train, when they sent a volley of coal and slate after the flying train. The constable was off the train in an instant and up the bank leading to the trestle before the lads could realize that they had been detected. There was a hurrying of small feet, but Neary was too fleet-footed for them and he overtook two of the lads, who gave their names as John Martinell and Frank McGuire. This was what the constable wanted, and in the evening Detective Crippen caused warrants to I be sworn out for their arrest before Alderman Jones; also for Frank Morella, whose identity was disclosed by his companions.

The warrants were given to Constable Neary for service.

Young Campbell commenced his adventure by traveling to No. 4 pond with boy a few years older than himself. While they were enjoying themselves at the pond, a farmer's wagon came along, into which young Campbell climbed to have a ride. The wagon, instead of coming Carbondale way, went over to the country, stopping in Canaan, where the youngster found he was alone and friendless Young Campbell's spirits dropped with the shades of night, when he realized his plight, and he was in a fearful way when he realized his separation from his parents. Finally, word was sent to his father, who hustled out of his bed at 3 o'clock Tuesday morning and took himself post-haste to his wandering boy. They were two glad hearts when the father and son met, and there was increased joy when the youngster was course of friends. The services began by Rev. E. A. Warriner, in white robe and black stole, reading a portion of the Psalms, commencing, "Lord let me know my end, and the number of my days that I may be certified how long I have to live." A quartette, consisting of Mrs. Lena Warner-Daunie, Miss Elizabeth Post, Mr. Van Gaasbeek, Munger and Mr. Herbert Brewster, rendered the hymn, "O Paradise, O this place on Friday last. Paradise, Who Doth Not Crave for The appointed lesson was read from the First Epistle to the Corinthians, fifteenth chapter, 20-58 verses inclusive. "Abide With Me. Fast Falls the Even-tide," was sung by the choir, and Rev. A. L. Benton, D. D., pastor of the First Presbyterian church, read an original poem, composed by a friend of the family at the time of Mrs. Willett's christening. when an infant. This closed the ser vices at the house, and after an opportunity was given to view the remains, the casket was borne to the hearse by the pall bearers, George H. Watrous, William H. Turrell, Harry W. been deposited therein:

The long procession wended its way slowly to the cemetery, which was reached just as the sun of a beautiful summer's day was sinking to rest behind the western horizon, and a peaceful hush was over all, as in sorrow and silence, save for the voice of the elergyman, the remains of this dearly beloved young woman was gently given into the keeping of the earth, until called forth on Resurrecmorning. Rev. Mr. Warriner read the comforting words found in Job, xix: 25-26, and followed with the Lord's Prayer, Collects and Benediction. The grave was a mass of flowers and evergreens, and the floral pieces were great in number and elaborate in design.
